Market Commentary

After President Trump delivered a “presidential” first address to congress, he subsequently failed to unite the Republican Party in a bid to push through his healthcare bill, raising uncertainty over future tax reform and infrastructure investment. All the while US equity markets, after peaking on the first day of the month, pared gains with the DJIA finishing -0.6% down. The month also saw a number of geopolitical events in Europe, with the Dutch election result rejecting anti-EU populism, and PM May initiating the UK's exit from Europe through the triggering of Article 50. Local equity markets still ended the period in positive territory, with Euro STOXX 50 and FTSE 100 finishing the month 5.7% and 1.1% higher respectively. In fixed income, the Fed raised rates for the second time in 3 months, and whilst US 10-year Treasury yields rose initially, they finished the month where they started on 2.39%. Elsewhere, UK 10-year gilt yields fell 1bps to 1.14% and German 10-year bunds rose 12bps to 0.33%.
